which began March 12, the day after Mr. Gorbachev took charge in the Kremlin, ended Tuesday.

"The completed first stage of the Geneva talks already gives ground to say that Washington does not seek agreement with the Soviet Union," Mr. Gorbachev said. Later, referring to the Soviet

Mr. Gorbachev made the points in a major speech to a plenary meeting of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, at which he also demonstrated the extent to which he has assumed control in the Kremlin by bringing three po-litical allies into the Politburo. Tass, the Soviet press agency, re-

7 West European Nations Agree to Technology Ties

BONN - Foreign and defense ministers of the seven-nation Western European Union agreed Tuesday to seek closer cooperation in a wide range of high-technology fields, in keeping with a recent French initiative.

But the ministers failed to come up with a joint response to President Ronald Reagan's invitation to Western allies take part in research for the U.S. Strategic Defense Ini-tiative, the space-based missile de-fense plan popularly known as "star wars.

A statement at the end of the rwo-day meeting said only that the ministers had agreed to continue consultations in an effort to reach a "coordinated" answer to the U.S.

In response to questions, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the West German foreign minister, made it plain that the merits of the research plan itself were not an issue but rather that the ministers had dealt only with the possible ways of harmonizing European reactions to it.

The two days of talks were seen as the start of long and difficult exchanges about the research plan and European economic and scien-tific interests. The U.S. proposal, which was expected to be a major topic of discussion at the summit of industrial nations attended by Mr. Reagan here at the beginning of

Sihanouk Seeks to Quit Coalition

Reusers BELING — Prince Norodom Sihanouk of Cambodia has sought to resign as president of the Cam-bodian coalition government-in-exile that opposes the Vietnamesebacked regime in Phnom Penh, foreign diplomats said Tuesday.

The diplomats said that Prince Sihanouk wrote to Khieu Samphan, the Communist prime minister of the coalition, tendering his resignation for health reasons. Telephone calls to the prince's residence in Pyongyang, North Korea, went unanswered Tuesday.

According to the diplomats, Si-hanouk, who has previously threatened to resign in protest against his two coalition partners, is not in poor health, although he has seemed tired recently and could be suffering from high blood pressure.

U.S. Says SS-20 Sites Still Being Built WASHINGTON (NYT) — Reagan administration officials say the Soviet Union is continuing construction work on seven sites for SS-20 medium-range missiles in Europe, despite a six-month moratorium on new deployment of such missiles announced by Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader The officials said Monday that the seven sites, each of which is capable of holding three of the three-warhead SS-20s, had been under construction before Mr. Gorbachev made his announcement on April 7. "We expect that they will deploy in all of the sites that were begun prior to April 7, and probably hold off putting up new sites until the moratorium runs out," a high-ranking State Department official said. He said an eighth site was being built in Soviet Asia. Honecker Starts 2-Day Visit to Italy

The annual gathering of Holocaust survivors is an "emotional kaleidoscope," as one called it on Monday. For Mr. Farben and many others here, it is complicated this year by their anguish over the president's planned trip to the military cemetery in Bitburg, West Germany, where 47 Waffen SS sol-diers are buried.

ald Reagan, I want to say only one thing," said Emil Farben, 83, in halting English. "When I wake up in the night, I still see the blood running down my son's face, where the SS shot him before my eyes."

Signs printed hastily appeared around the Survivors Village at the Civic Center on Monday. They urged: "Call the White House. Tell President Reagan, Bitburg is not his place." No honor to SS. Make one phone call. Tell a friend."

The annual reunions of survivors in the United States began in Washington in 1983. An estimated 14,000 attended the first.

But the gathering's sponsors dis-tanced themselves from such organized protests aimed at the president. They said that they had sent a elegram on Monday thanking him for his recent help in evacuating Ethiopian Jews to Israel.

They said that they did not want the controversy over Mr. Reagan's planned visit to the cemetery to obscure the gathering's purpose or their love for the United States.

Benjamin Meed, president of the American Gathering and Federa-tion of Jewish Holocaust Survivors, said: "I am not a man of threat, I personally am not going to lead this organization to threaten anybody."
He added, "We will never be a political organization."

Meanwhile, Nosh Dear, a New York City councilman, said Mon-day that he would be at Bitburg during Mr. Reagan's visit, wearing the striped clothing that had been issued to his father-in-law at the concentration camp at Dachau, near Munich.

He called on Mr. Reagan to can-cel the trip and said, "I will do whatever I can to embarrass him." Mr. Meed said: "The young are more radical, not in the political sense, but in that they feel the pain of their parents. If we would have to react, we would react against Germany, not America."

In Washington, the assistant minority leader in the House of Representatives, Trent Lott, a Republican of Mississippi, said that he and other House Republicans believe that Mr. Reagan should not go to Bitburg.

The Mutual Radio network told other radio networks that the Pentagon had activated a prearranged pool of newspaper, radio and tele-vision reporters, shortly after Mutual had been asked to send a correspondent to Andrews Air Force Base by 4 A.M. Sunday to cover an

Department directive to keep the plans secret. When a Post correspondent in Nicaragua learned that a radio colleague had been told by his home office that the pool had been activated, the correspondent told his editors. The Pentagon subsequently confirmed that a pool test had been initiated Saturday night,

Bart Tessler, Mutual's news director, said that in informing the other networks he had acted under guidelines that radio executives had given the Pentagon last fall. He said Defense Department officials had never responded to the guide-lines, which call for notifying other radio com-panies so they could arrange for transmission facilities from the pool member.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger approved the Pentagon's pool plan last year to ensure news media coverage of surprise U.S. military operations such as the Grenada invasion in October 1983, when the press was excluded for more than two days.

Democrat Gets Indiana's

Disputed Seat

Los Angeles Tunes Service WASHINGTON - In a vote characterized by bouts of shouting and table pounding between two congressmen, a Democratic-con-trolled House task force accepted an official recount Monday that awarded a four-vote victory to Representative Frank X. McCloskey, a Democrat, in Indiana's long-disputed congressional race.

The task force, on a 2-1 vote, rejected its sole Republican member's call for a special election in Indiana's 8th District and sent the bitterly contested four-month dispute to the House Administration Committee. A committee vote is expected later this week.

Representatives William M. Thomas, a Republican, and Leon E. Panetta, a Democrat, both of California, clashed over the adoption of a report by the General Accounting Office that Mr. Mc-Closkey had defeated Richard D. McIntyre, a Republican, by 116,645 votes to 116,641.

At one point Mr. Thomas, after losing numerous procedural votes to Mr. Panetta and a fellow Democrat, William Clay of Missouri, asked Mr. Panetta, "Do we have to take a 2-to-1 vote on whether I can ask a question?"

"No matter how you break this, your candidate didn't win," an irate Mr. Panetta said a few min-He added, "Surely there must be utes later, drowning out Mr. Thomthree-way shouting match. Brazil: Uncertainty Ahead

A Test for the Republicans

Brazilians have suffered an unkind blow in the death of their recently elected but uninaugurated president, Tancredo Neves. Mr. Neves, who endured a month-long medical ordeal, had appointed only some of the top members of the government that he intended to run before he fell ill.

In the month since, the man elected vice president with him. José Sarney, has taken some further steps to get the democratic system and the new government in place. But Mr. Samey, necessarily, moved slowly, waiting for public pressure to build for him to take actions, and proceeding with immense caution.

_ There were reasons for this. The vice president (who became, while Mr. Neves was ill, the acting president) did not wish to appear over-eager or in any way ambitious to assume Mr. Neves's place. Another reason was that Mr. Samey, who came over from the military government's party to run with Mr. Neves against a man that military government favored, does not begin to enjoy the popularity or support that Tancredo Neves did. Mr. Sarney will now have a huge political chore to accompany his formidable task of governing.

Although there seems to be no prospect of an effort to revoke or overturn Brazil's new democracy, there will be much controversy as to how soon direct elections for a successor government should be held; there probably will be an effort to have them held very soon. And there are politicians in Mr. Neves's Brazilian Democratic Movement Party who are

The Republican Party faces an important test. It must put together a plan for dealing with the very large budget deficits that threaten the economic future of the United States.

The plan must be more than a public relations dominant political force for years to come.

None of this will make it any easier for Mr. Sarney to preside, and the new president has much to do. Brazil, like other countries in the region, is obliged to fight a ferocious inflation rate with steps that are alienating workers and threatening a part of the population that is inordinately poor. Its export earnings, spectacularly high last year, may be sharply reduced this year. Brazil has sent one failed letter of intent after another to the International Monetary Fund, and is now in another round of negotiations with the Fund. The emergency measures that have enabled the country to carry its debts will not be adequate indefinitely - particularly if and when the North American economy, with its gigantic demand for Latin exports, begins to slow down.

Governing Brazil is going to require immense skill and steadiness. It is going to require a high degree of trust between the people at the top and the people at the bottom. It is not an opportune moment for a long hiatus or a debilitating quarrel over who is in charge and who possesses the title to legitimate authority. The country's financial position requires decisions that cannot be postponed.

The sudden death of the man who won the election, in the moment of his triumph, puts enormous tests ahead of Brazil and its new democracy. But the nation and its political leadership have shown, over the past year, that they are capable of great things.

The alliance would be overtaxed if it had to

P ARIS — Advanced technology has become a major European issue, a hope and a fear, a promise and a threat to the future of allied relations. The problems are not really new, but they have come together on many different levels to make a sharp new impact on the public discourse.

They will certainly arise at the Western summit in Bonn next month, not so much as an issue to be resolved but as a shadow overlaying all other talks on money, trade and East-West troubles.

Two developments and a recent revelation in France reflect the extent to which the prospects of high technology affect policy.

The most dramatic event was an hour-and-ahalf television show last week called "Facing War." The narrator was the widely admired singer and actor Yves Montand, staunchly implanted well on the left for most of his life but converted a couple of years ago to become a preacher against the menace of communism.

The theme was that France is no longer as safe as it thinks under its nuclear mini-umbrella, that having to face a choice between war and abject surrender is possible, and that it had better look to its defenses. The stark presentations provoked little rebuttal. No one denies that technological change affects security.

Earlier in the week, President François Mitterrand proposed a European initiative to look into "star wars" technology, primarily to be sure that Europe's economies are not deprived of possible civilian commercial benefits, but also to strengthen bargaining power with the United States. The Europeans are disturbed at the way Washington is approaching them country by country, even company by company, without government agreement. There is concern that each could be locked into a worse deal than they could negotiate as a bloc.

The previous French notion of a fully independent European effort on space defense got nowhere. But it left ideas that could be useful about a possible surveillance system.

The revelation came with publication of a Soviet document that explained for the first time why 47 Soviet officials were suddenly expelled from France two years ago. The paper, said to be only one of many that French intelligence obtained in an extraordinary coup of counterespionage, showed how carefully, deliberately and effectively Moscow has organized its technological spy campaign for military advantage.

It was as a result of the coup that France set aside its skepticism about American demands for stringent new constraints on selling technology to the East bloc.

The document showed that 61 percent of the technological advances the Russians filched around the world came from the United States. Paris shared its find with Washington, which reflects the good relations Mr. Mitterrand has had with President Reagan even when there were Communists in the government.

The reason for making the disclosure now is not clear. Officials him that since it takes about two years to relaunch a shattered spy network, going public with the past incident was meant as a warning to Moscow to restrain itself.

But one cause of European uneasiness at U.S. invitations to join in star wars research is that the Pentagon may so tie up the results that European trade will be blocked in a variety of technologies. The irony of the contradiction with Mr. Reagan's offer to "share" findings with the Russians is not lost, but that offer was never taken seriously.

In any case, the suggestion of an independent "eye in the sky" is gaining support. It recalls President Eisenhower's offer to the Russians of an open skies" program of joint surveillance, actually achieved now, but in rivalry, and menaced by development of satellite-killers on both sides.

A third net, depending on neither superpower, could provide an enormous reassurance to the world in time of crisis, helping stability with an added guard against misinformation and miscalculation. Sadly, the United Nations, which ought to perform this peace-supporting role, just is not up to objective, effective action. Several middle pow-ers, not only NATO allies but Switzerland, Israel, Australia and Japan, do have the capacity to create and operate the service if they collaborate.

Europe especially is shuddering at increasingly frequent predictions that it will sink into Third World impotence and poverty if it does not plunge into technology. That is the new rallying cry for a Community whose politics have foundered on artichokes and spilt milk. It is the new challenge for an Atlantic partnership that cannot decide whether the key issue is competition or cooperation.

A Role for European Diplomacy in the Mideast?

By Giles Merritt

BRUSSELS — What role should Europe play in the Middle East? In the past the Europeans have been reproached for muddying the waters. But a joint declaration by the EC governments might assist the diplomatic feelers being tenta-tively put out in the Middle East and would boost the renewed U.S. effort to mediate.

in several European capitals, and increasingly in Washington, there is a school of thought that a more active European Community role in the Middle East peace process could be helpful. During the last nine months of American inaction in the Middle East, Europe has been fearful that a vacuum was being created that would eventually suffocate the moderate forces. West Germany is particularly interested in establishing a sort of diplomatic stand-by system, so that if U.S. efforts falter the Europeans will be able to step in and keep the Middle East dialogue alive. In some years Washington welcomes foreign policy initiatives from its European allies in areas resents them. The Reagan administhat the Europeans could help at for initiatives in the Middle East.

That mood should be seen in the context of the long-standing differ-ences over the Middle East that have separated the United States and the Europeans. There is a postwar history of misunderstandings and mutual suspicions that predates the United States's failure to back Britain and France during the Suez crisis in 1956.

For years, American policymak-ers doubted the motives of the British and the French in the Middle East because of their past colonial connections. More recently the U.S. suspicion has been that the Europeans' real concern is to safeguard their oil supplies. Above all, the United States has not forgotten or forgiven the EC's surprise Venice declaration of June 1980, when without warning to the Carter ad-ministration, EC countries endorsed the Palestinian people's right to self-determination as part of any peace settlement.

Since then, American policy has moved closer to the EC position. And that, together with the realiza-tion that the Lebanon crisis and the Iran-Iraq war are adding a danger-ous dimension to the Middle East, has helped convince opinion on both sides of the Atlantic that a new EC intervention might be useful. It had been intended, in fact, that the EC would issue a new statement on the Middle East at the end of last month, when the 10 heads of goveroment met in Brussels for regular talks. Italy, which currently holds the revolving six-month presidency of the EC Council of Ministers, has been particularly anxious to promore a Community initiative on the Middle East. Its own geopolitical position and history make Italy the keenest of the EC countries to become involved in Middle Eastern politics. But in the end, the summit was dominated by debate on the entry of Spain and Portugal into the EC in 1986. .

Yet a common stance on the Arab-Israeli conflict might have evaded the Enropean governments even if they had actively sought one. That is the key reason they are not Taking the EC member states for-more involved in the peace process. ward on the issue is a ticklish business. The pro-Israeli sentiments of the Dutch, for example, have to be reconciled with the pro-Arab sentiments of the Greeks; meanwhile, France, Britain, West Germany and Italy each have their own finely nuanced policies on the matter Yet the Italians believed they had adequately prepared the ground and hoped they might, in a modest way, repeat the success they enjoyed — when last they had the EC presidency - with the Venice declaration. In a four-month flurry of diplomatic activity, the Italians had consulted all the major players.

Beginning with a December meeting in Tunis between Prime Minister Bettino Craxi and Yasser Arafat, the Palestine Liberation Organization chairman, Mr. Craxi and his able foreign minister, Giulio Andreotti, talked to the Jordanians, the Syrians, and the leaders of Egypt and Israel.
The text submitted to the EC leaders welcomed the recent rapprochement between Jordan and the PLO, as well as the Mubarak initiative; its tone was such that it might have been drafted by Secretary of State George Shultz's aides.

The summit rather brusquely rejected the proposed declaration, saving there was no time to agree on its wording and that the Italian presidency should therefore release it in its own name. It seemed the sort of offhandedness that could make greater EC involvement in the Middle East a mixed blessing.

No Option But to Love The Bomb

By Philip Geyelin

NNAPOLIS, Maryland -"We've come to love the bomb. so to sav."

Standing alone, those words could get a European politician or diplomat in a heap of trouble. But they fit sensibly enough in the context of what the British ambassador in Washington, Sir Oliver Wright, was seeking to explain in a recent speech here entitled "The NATO Alliance: A European View." The occasion was the 25th annual Naval Academy Foreign Affairs Conference and the ambassador was making a point of more than passing interest as President Reagan gears up for his European tour in early May.

He was talking about the differthe was talking about the difference between Europeans' view of the world in general (and of the Soviet Union in particular) and that of most Americans. Having experienced conventional war in a way that Americans have not, he argued, most, if by no means all, Europeans have a certain grim confidence in the deterrence of conventional war by the threat of nuclear retaliation.

Left by geography with no alternative, Sir Oliver argues, Europeans have also adopted over the years a less apocalyptic way of thinking and talking about the threat to their neighborhood than the Reagan administration conveys when it speaks of the comparatively minuscule Soviet presence in Cuba and Nicaragua.

The contrast was made more vivid by the character of the conference, which brought invitees from 140 universities. They were a diverse, intelligent lot, engaging in intense and well-informed round-table debate.

But. Sir Oliver aside, the rest of what was served up was hardly what you would call a balanced diet for hungry young minds. Vice Admiral John M. Poindexter, deputy assistant to President Reagan for national security affairs, opened things up with the White House line.

"World War III has already begun," he warned, "in the form of state-supported terrorism." He urged the students to think deeply about how to fulfill our "moral obligation to support freedom fighters."
The keynote address was delivered by the newly Republican Jeane Kirk-patrick, the former ambassador to the United Nations. For an hour, she belabored the Nicaraguan case. But she paled by comparison with President John R. Silber of Boston University, whose Democratic Party affiliation was supposed to have given bipartisan coloration to the Kissinger commission on Central America.

Rattling the dominoes until you had to wonder whether we would all live out the night, he cited a weak and unreliable Mexico as the final domino, and tossed out an estimate of between $50 billion and $100 billion as the cost of defending America's southern border (at the expense of NATO and the rest of the world) if United States lailed i the Nicaraguan "contras."

At the end, you had to wonder which was the superpower, the defender of Western security, cool, confident and in command, and which was the once-great empire, now living with its continental NATO companions under the guns of the Warsaw Pact — the United States or Britain? Sir Oliver tried to straighten it out: You are our friendly neighborhood superpower. Thank God for Ameri-

But the ambassador gently questioned whether most Americans understood Western Europe any better than they understood the Soviet Union. Acknowledging the potential power of European peace move-ments, he noted that the European allies were nonetheless deploying intermediate-range nuclear missiles on schedule. Tackling the "burden-sharing" issue head on, he argued that Europe provided 90 percent of the ground forces, 90 percent of the armored divisions, 80 percent of the combat aircraft and 80 percent of the tanks defending the central front.

He sees this as "the front line of the free world," and the world's "most dangerous" area because it contains the "greatest concentration of lethal weapons anywhere."
The Europeans, he insisted, were well aware of the Soviet Union's excessive military strength, aggressive policy and dark, worldwide designs. It is our business to match its strength and frustrate its objectives." But he found it possible to take some comfort in Soviet weaknesses: eco-nomic, ideological, systemic. If the Russians are undeniably imperialistic and aggressive," they also come across to those who have lived alongside them for centuries as cautious, defensive, possessed of a "siege mentality based on repeated invasions." Sir Oliver urged Americans to take some of these contradictions into account.

You do not have to buy all of this to understand the European perception of the Soviet mind-set. In a certain sense, the Europeans have the best seats in the house.

More Tax. And Gladly

By Richard J. Dennis

CHICAGO — When Senator Bill Bradley and Representative Richard A. Gephardt introduced a tax-reform bill, I was so interested in their approach to a fairer, simpler, more efficient tax system that I asked my accountants how my tax pay-ments might vary if it became law.

I was fairly sure of the validity of the Bradley-Gephardt flat-tax approach, but I figured it could not hurt to see if I was one of those unlucky three of every 10 Americans who would pay a Political more under this proposal. Political philosophy is fine, but there is no law against pursuing one's own genuine self-interest. As a commodities broker, I make heavy use of long-term capital-gains deductions, which Bradley-Gephardt would eliminate. I enjoy deducting my business expenses at my highest tax rate instead of the lowest, as would be the case under Bradley-Gephardt. The accountants say my average tax rate would rise about 3 percentage points under Bradley-Gephardt. Nonetheless, I have decided I am all for it. In fact, I am so enthusiastic that I am lobbying for it as a member of the council of advis-ers of the Fair Tax Foundation, established by Mr. Bradley and Mr. Gephardt. Am I acting contrary to self-interest? Not necessarily.

Today, investors and entrepreneurs must give too much attention to a complex, arbitrary tax code. This diverts effort from productive to useless financial activities.

Without the bias of our tax laws, poorly conceived oil-well projects, for example, are ridiculous investments. I receive dozens of proposals that brokers would be embarrassed to present if it were not for the tax benefits. With tax reform, the brokers' self-interest would require them to present productive long-term activities for investment. Today's tax code encourages an ivestor to pursue certain strategies. For example, to get tax benefits, he must decide to liquidate unprofitable stock positions before they become long-term. This typifies the short-term thinking permeating American corporations even though they must compete in the world economy with Japan, which stays with an investment over the long haul.

Ordinarily honest citizens feel tempted to cheat on their taxes because they enjoy no loopholes and can see that others have specially de-signed ones. They suspect that the tax law will become more lopsided as well-focused lobbies make their mark. Even those who want to pay their fair share are stymied by a tax code that reads like "Alice in Wonderland" and whose interpretation is endlessly debated in the courts. Complex, arbitrary, individualized tax rules reduce respect for all laws. In a system that depends on volun-

in a system that depends on volun-tary compliance, as America's largely does, I would be willing to pay a little more to get a fair, simple system that would treat all taxpayers equally. This would encourage tax compli-ance. I never expect to like paying taxes, but I do not like being a fool by paying more than other records in paying more than other people in similar circumstances. There are other important tax issues: having appropriately progressive rates of taxation; distributing the tax burden fairly among different income groups; reducing the deficit. But they are all separate issues and linking them would kill them all. The Bradley-Gephardt plan to maintain the current tax distribution and raise the same amount of revenue is logically consistent and strategically nec-essary. (If we are not to have Bradley-

Gephardt, then the Treasury's tax reform plan also provides fundamental, necessary changes;)
What, then, is a person's genuine self-interest in taxation? Getting a lower rate than everyone else? That is not possible for all of us, is it? Why not a fair, simple system that treats everyone equally, that promotes better economic performance for each to share in, that encourages investors and entrepreneurs to focus on production, not tax savings. I would give up my tax loopholes to get it. I'd rather keep 72 percent of my income in a good economy than 75 percent of it in today's economy, which is crip-pled by our tax system. That's both good political philosophy and genu-

The Egyptian Role

Regarding the opinion column "Mideast: Pitfalls of U.S. Activism" (April 15) by Fouad Ajami:

Mr. Ajami's views on Egypt's ef-forts toward peace in the Middle East are incorrect and misleading. What Israel Wants

Regarding "'Right' Is the Wrong Way" (Letters, April 8):

John Whitbeck is quite right in questioning the necessity of having the Arabs recognize "Israel's right to exist." but not for the reason he gives. The word "right" does indeed have "unavoidable moral connotations," but only someone choosing to ignore history as well as morality can equate the Jewish settlers of the land of Israel with "European settlers of North America, South Africa and Australasia ... [dispossessing] the indigenous population," It is questionable whether present-day Palestinian Arabs, many of whom are third- or fourth-generation immigrants from neighboring Arab countries, can be considered "indigenous" (Jerusalem, even 140 years ago, had a Jewish majority). Be this as it may, it is not the right to exist that Israel wants the Arabs to recognize but rather the massailable right of every nation to live in peace.

MANILA - The Philippine defense minister, Juan Ponce Enrile, has promised victory in the government's struggle against a steadily growing Communist insurgency but warned that the fight might last two years, three years, half a decade" and of bloodshed to come.

"You cannot fight an insurgency with words," he said. "You have to use guns and bullets. I hope the destruction will be minimal, but there will be shedding of blood. We cannot avoid that,"

Mr. Enrile's statement is a sign that the Philippine government has come to acknowledge the serious-ness of the situation. "I think they realize they cannot get away with just talk any more," a political ana-

Mr. Enrile spoke in an interview last week against a background of continuing bad news for the government of President Ferdinand E. Marcos. Particularly disturbing to Manula was the possibility that the $83.5 million second installment of a loan by the International Monetary Fund might not come through

But the public is also discontented with worsening unemployment, a falling gross domestic product and a $2.5-billion balance-of-payments deficit, which is increasing. As the economic situation worsens, the insurgency continues to spread. The Communist New People's Army is steadily strengthen-ing its grasp on Mindanao, the fertile southern island where it has been strong for years, and is expanding in areas farther north. A particularly restive area is the sugar-producing island of Negros, which has been his hard by the fall of world sugar prices. The guerrillas are growing more aggressive as well in Leyte and Samar. In Panay and Bicol, and in the mountains of northern Luzon, the rebels are exceptionally strong. Stung by the increasing criticism from U.S. officials as well as from Filipinos, the government has begun an effort to seize the military month, government units have gone on the offensive, and army spokesmen report successes

But through March and much of April, guerrilla attacks were at their highest levels and so were government losses. Perhaps the most stunning among recent setbacks came late last month in Negros, where rebels raided a government armory and left with 400 weapons, mostly M-16 rifles. Defense officials acknowledged that this was the worst single arms loss of the Communist

In recent days, Senator John F. Kerry, a Massachusetts Democrat, and Representative Stephen J. Solarz, a New York Democrat, have told Mr. Marcos here of U.S. concern about the situation, including the potential threat to two U.S. military bases in the Philippines: Clark Air Base and Subic Bay Naval Station. Mr. Marcos assured both visitors that all steps necessary to control the insurgency were

But Mr. Enrile put his response differently. "We respect your opin-ions," he said with a smile, "but tell us when you last won a counterinsurgency.

Perhaps in part because of Washington's concern, the Philip-pine military is looking again at its counterinsurgency strategy. Lieu-tenant General Fidel V. Ramos, acting armed forces chief of staff, convened a group of about 50 senior officers last week for two days of what was described as a "full assessment" of recent counterinsurgency experience. Mr. Enrile stressed the political aspects of the effort. "An insurgency problem is not merely a military problem," he said. "For us, we perceive it to be basically a political problem, rooted in social and economic causes." He said it was necessary to target the political organization of the Communists, not only the military forces. Some Western sources put the number of political supporters at perhaps 100,000, scattered over most of the major

On paper, there should be not a contest. The Philippine armed forces, including army, marines and constabulary, total about 200,000 men, in addition, there is a militia of about 50,000 militia, but these are considered to be of dubious quality. Against this force, the guerrilla forces are small. Their strength, according to the Defense Ministry, is estimated at 8,500 to 9,500 men. The army says the New People's Army has 10,000 to 12,000 guerrillas, Still higher is a U.S. fig-ure of 15,000 cited in Washington recently. Despite the ratio of government to rebel troops, the guerrillas make steady progress. At a recent press conference in Mindanao, the rebels said they planned to use their experience gained in the southern capital of Davao, where the New People's Army virtually controls some urban areas, to spread the insurgency to Manila starting early next

Asked about this, Mr. Enrile said sarcastically; "I hope so, I do not discount that possibility. But as they say, the proof of the pudding is in the eating, Let's see." Warning on U.S. Bases

Mr. Marcos is prepared to expel U.S. military personnel if Washington fails to recognize Manila's sov-ereignty over the two U.S. military bases by 1991, the Bulletin Today newspaper quoted the Philippine labor minister, Blas F. Ople, as say-ing Monday. The report was dis-patched by Agence France-Presse.

U.S. Reports Iran and Iraq Are Massing More Troops

By James Gerstenzang
Lea Angeles Times Service
WASHINGTON — Iran and Iraq have begun to mass even greater concentrations of troops along the southern reaches of their border, according to Reagan ad-ministration officials, These officials, speaking on the condition that they not be identified, said they expected the Iranians to drive toward the Iraqi city of Basra, separated by marshes from the northern end of the Gulf. So far, the Iranians have been unable to overcome lraqi troops in the marshes.

Such a campaign would send the Iranians against some of the bestprepared Iraqi troops, the officials said. But, if successful, it would be considered a military breakthrough

Administration officials said the franians had deployed as many as 100,000 troops in the current buildup, along with hundreds of tanks and artillery pieces. Among the troops deployed were members of the Revolutionary Guard, who have spearheaded the fighting.

"But no one could predict when any battle would begin," one offi-

In addition, according to one of-ficial, the United States is receiving indications of "growing domestic war" in Iran, Such unrest is "being watched very carefully," he said.

The reports, based on intelligence information, indicated continued difficulties for Iran as pressure built in the war zone. But Western reporters have rarely been able to reach the front, and independent assessments, as well as detailed government reports, have been infrequent, The officials stressed that although intelligence reports indicat-ed that the buildup had been under way for several weeks, there was no indication as to when the battle

U.S. Urges Basic Trade Reforms Wants a Japanese Import Policy, Not Short-Term Relief

Normal Heart," the new play by Larry Kramer at the Public Theater, is boiling that. In this freely polemical drama about the private and public feelout of the AIDS epidemic, the playwright starts angry, gets furious, then skyrockets into sheer rage.

Although Kramer's theatrical talents are not always as highly developed as his conscience, there can be little doubt that "The Normal Heart" is the most outspoken play around - or that it speaks up about a subject that justifies its sense of urgency.

What gets Kramer mad is his conviction that neither the heterosexual nor homosexual community has fully met the crisis posed by acquired immune deficiency syndrome. He accuses the governmental, medical and media establishments of foot-dragging in combating the disease, especially in the early days of the epidemic, and he is even tougher on homosexual leaders who, in his view, were too cowardly or too mesmerized by the ideology of sexual liberation to get the story out. Some of the accusations are questionable, and we oten hear only one side of inflammatory debates. But on occasion the stage seethes with the conflict of impassioned, literally life-and-death argument.

When the hero, Ned Weeks (Brad Davis), implores his peers to curtail sexual activity rather than risk contracting AIDS, an equally righteous activist vehemently counters that this would negate years of fighting for the freedom to practice homosexual love. While the logic may be with Ned, Kramer allows the antagonist, woundingly played by Robert Dorfman, to give full ideological and emotional vent to an opposing point of view.

Much to his credit, Kramer makes no attempt to sanitize AIDS; the scenes featuring the disease's suffering victims are harrowing. The playwright is equally forceful when he passionately champions a proud homosexual identity "that isn't just sexual."

Davis has the unenviable assignment of playing a shrill public scold, and one admires the actor's refusal to sentimentalize him. But he seems vacant in his reposeful romantic scenes with D. W. Moffett, whose characterization of a reporter is the most complex and

The mountains or the shore? Spain has plenty of both.

Our mountains, among the highest in Europe, offer some of the world's best and least crowded skiing. There's great climbing, too, and every other mountain sport in season.

No matter when you come to Spain, you will find a fiesta somewhere. There are literally hundreds throughout the year. Some are simple Saints' days in little village squares. But these are often wonderful for their intimacy, the welcome given to strangers and their sense of natural, unplanned gaiety.

Others are spectacles, elaborately staged and wardrobed. See processionals, mock battles, floral decoration competitions, wine harvests or solemnly impressive holy days. Or watch the breaking of wild horses or the showing of exquisitely trained horses. Or see the running of the bulls at the St. Fermin fiesta in Pamplona, made famous by Hemingway.

What's to do at night between fiestas?

If night clubs, casinos, ballet, opera, jazz, folk music, discos, rock music and flamenco dancers don't interest you, there really isn't very much.

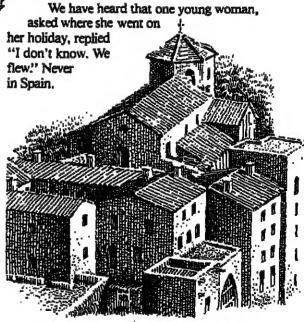

Perhaps people-watching at an outdoor cafe while sipping a rare sherry might catch your imagination. Or you could just go to your room and read a book.

Speaking of rooms... Spain offers every kind of accommodation, from simple country inns to world-class deluxe

Some of our most modern hotels are in some of our most ancient buildings. Many castles and other historic landmarks have been converted with ingenuity and elegance, featuring art and furnishings of their periods. Shultz-Weinberger Feud: A Source of Key U.S. Policy Stalemates

By Philip Taubman New York Times Service

ASHINGTON — Thunder rolled across the flight deck of the French VV aircraft carrier Clemenceau in the east-ern Mediterranean. One by one, 1- Super Etendard jet fighters roared skyward and banked toward Lebanon. Their mission: to retaliate for the suicide truck-bombings of the French and American military headquarters in Beirut that had killed 59 French paratroopers and 241 American servicemen

Until that day - Nov. 17, 1983 - the raid had been conceived and planned as a joint French-American effort to attack targets near the Lebanese town of Baalbek, a stronghold of pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem militiamen believed by the Central Intelligence Agency to have been involved in the bombings.

President Ronald Reagan had authorized U.S. Navy fighter planes attached to the 6th Fleet to join the air strike, a decision that has remained one of the better-kept secrets of the Reagan administration.

But the French carried out the strike alone. The American planes never took off. The exact reasons remain classified, but this much is certain: A mission championed by Secretary of State George P. Shultz, viewed warily by Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger and approved by the president was aborted because the final go-ahead order was not issued in time by the Defense Department.

According to Michael L Burch, a Pentagon spokesman, Mr. Weinberger was not personally responsible for that decision. Some White House officials say otherwise, insisting that the defense secretary tacitly agreed to have the mission scrubbed. But at the very least, the incident serves as a dramatic example of the battles that have raged over foreign policy dur-ing the last two years, in no small part because Mr. Shultz and Mr. Weinberger have disagreed, often openly, on a variety of major issues.

A White House official tells, for example, of a White House meeting in 1983 when Mr. Shultz, frustrated by Mr. Weinberger's reluctance to apply more military pressure against Syria, said, "If you're not willing to use force, maybe we should cut your budget." Mr. Weinberger, ac-cording to one of his sides, seemed intentionally to taunt Mr. Shultz about the failure of the 1983 agreement between Israel and Lebanon that the secretary of state had personally negotiated.

The Defense Department, directly ment policymaking. responsible for defending the nation's security against hostile powers, is often more conservative about improving relations with the Soviet Union and less willing to commit American House, have produced, and continue to proforces to combat

The differences between Mr. Shuitz and Mr. Weinberger reflect very different backgrounds and temperaments and a longstanding professional rivalry. "There is a personal edge to the disputes between George and Cap that is much sharper than previous fends," says a veteran national security official. "These guys have been

The competition dates back to 1970, when

Mr. Shultz was director of the Office of Man-tion and Mr. Weinberger was his top deputy. Later, both men worked for Bechtel, a giant construction company in San Francisco, with Mr. Weinberger again in a lesser position.

At times, Mr. Weinberger has clearly chafed at the disparity. Joseph Laitin, who worked in the budget office in the early 1970s, recalls,

"Cap became so frustrated with his lack of clear

Similar disputes led to a sull-unresolved iminitiatives and Mr. Weinberger advocating an increase in U.S. pressure on the regime.

HE relationship between Mr. Shultz and Mr. Weinberger is complex and subtle. Mr. Shultz, 64, is by nature and training a professor, mediator and private man. He prefers conciliation to confrontation. Often impassive -a colleague describes him as "sphinxlike" be is a man of enormous self-assurance.

Mr. Weinberger, 67, is a litigator, a politician, altogether more of a public personality. He seems to thrive on confrontation and, like his dol Winston Churchill, can be totally unyield-The Shultz-Weinberger disputes, coupled with a lack of clear direction from the White ing in defense of principles he considers important, such as sustained growth in the defense budget. Unlike Mr. Shultz, Mr. Weinberger does not radiate a sense of being at peace with himself and his position.

Some ideological differences have seeped into the Shultz-Weinberger relationship as Mr. Weinberger has adopted the hard-line, ami-Soviet position of many in the Reagan administration. In this, he also has been heavily influenced by the anti-Soviet views of his key aides. Mr. Shultz, while hardly a pushover on Soviet cause Mr. Shultz and Mr. Weinberger remained issues, favors a more flexible approach designed divided over what sort of deal to offer the to reduce superpower tensions.

Institutional factors make some conflict between the secretaries of state and defense and passe over how to deal with the Sandinists in their aides inevitable. But the differences be-Nicaragua, with Mr. Shultz favoring diplomatic tween Mr. Shultz and Mr. Weinberger have not always fallen within reasonable limits.

Their first major clash was over an embargo on overseas sales of certain kinds of oil and gas equipment, a move intended to slow down construction of a natural-gas pipeline from the Soviet Union to Europe. Mr. Weinberger fought to maintain the embargo; Mr. Shultz opposed it as harmful to Washington's relations with its European allies, and eventually it was dropped.

As a means of forcing the Sandinists to stop sending military supplies to the guerrillas in El Salvador, Mr. Weinberger favored increasing pressure on Managua — increasing American support for the Nicaraguan rebels and conduct-ing large-scale U.S. military maneuvers in near-

Mr. Shultz, while not opposed to military pressure, advocated a diplomatic approach as well, including direct negotiations between Washington and Managua. The result of this divergence, as many government aides acknowledge, has been an often inconsistent and confusing foreign policy stance in that area.

HE differences and tensions between Mr. Shultz and Mr. Weinberger came to a boil in 1983 over the question of what the United States should do in Lebanon.

Mr. Shultz was committed to the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon. According to aides, he felt that the United States had to see through its obligations or suffer a serious set-back to its policies in the Middle East and its prestige worldwide.

Soon he and Mr. Weinberger were tangling.
As the situation in Lebanon deteriorated, particularly after the Oct. 23, 1983, truck bombing of the U.S. and French military headquarters, Mr. Shultz advocated military retaliation. Mr. Weinberger opposed any escalation of force, arguing that it could lead to a war with Syria.

In late 1983, the president's top national security aides - meeting as the National Security Planning Group, an informal committee of the National Security Council —held a series of sessions in the White House. The question was whether the use of force by the United States should be escalated beyond the shelling by the battleship New Jersey and other vessels posi-tioned off the Lebanese coast. Mr. Weinberger, according to participants, refused to budge, a stance that was particularly irritating to Mr. Shultz, trained as he was in the arts of mediation

Mr. Shultz and Robert C. McFarlane, the president's national security adviser, eventually succeeded in persuading Mr. Reagan to approve the air strike with the French. Mr. Shultz, according to his aides, was frustrated and discouraged when American participation in the raid

The question of how to respond to terrorism in Lebanon was raised again last month when the Reagan administration, at Mr. Shultz's urging warned that Washington would retaliate against Iran if it executed American hostages. kidnapped by Lebanese extremists influenced by the Khomeini regime in Iran.

can prestige or influence abroad. The White House clearly has the power to put an end to the Shultz-Weinberger disputes, but Mr. Reagan's leadership style does not generally include knocking heads to settle differences. He prefers to set the overall objectives and tone of the administration and leave the details to others.

R. Weinberger initially had a major advantage over Mr. Shultz in such an atmosphere, since his relationship with Mr. Reagan was of much longer standing. Mr. Weinberger had far greater access to the president. But top people on the White House staff have worked hard to redress the balance. According to Michael K. Deaver, White House deputy chief of staff, he and James A. Baker 3d. the former chief of staff, were able to increase

Mr. Shultz's access to the president. During the last year, Mr. Shultz has been able to develop those all-important alliances within the administration, and the recent change in command in the White House staff was a lucky break for him, Mr. Shultz and Donald T. Regan, the new chief of staff, are old friends. On most issues, Mr. Shultz has found another ally in Mr. McFarlane who, according to some of his aides, is often frustrated by Mr. Weinberger's intransi-

The Shultz-Weinberger struggle has proceeded on two basic levels. They have fought about large issues that determine the overall direction of the nation's foreign policy and they have fought over specific steps to implement policies.

Today, according to observers, Mr. Reagan's foreign policy goals reflect Mr. Shultz's views in several areas. A senior White House official, for example, says, "George has prevailed recently in" the sense that the president has endorsed his general agenda of resuming the Geneva negotiations and looking for ways to push forward the peace process in the Middle East."

On the other hand, the White House seems to have adopted the tougher line on Nicaragua espoused by Mr. Weinberger, and neither man has put his stamp on the arms control issue.

Moreover, even on some issues where the Shultz view seems to be in the ascendancy, the president has failed to endorse specific steps to implement those policies in deference to Mr. Weinberger's opposition. For example, the American negotiators were sent to Geneva without instructions as to precisely what reductions in arms in the Soviet nuclear arsenal would acceptable to Washington as part of an arms control agreement.

Mr. McFarlane is generally credited with enincering a reduction in some of the outward signs of turmoil. An example of Mr. McFarlane's peacekeeping mission, according to a se-nior administration official, was his decision to involve Mr. Reagan at an early stage of the discussions leading up to Mr. Shultz's January meeting with the Soviet foreign minister, Andrei

The public bickering between Mr. Shultz and Mr. McFarlane's goal, the control of the administration make sure that everyone in the administration make sure that everyone in the administration would understand that the president really would understand that the president really wanted arms talks to resume. And, in fact, harmony was achieved. But as a senior official points out, the agenda of those talks dealt primarily with procedural matters, not the substantive arms control issues that must be worked out before any final agreements can be reached.

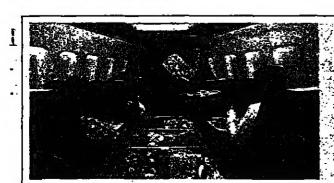

Few authorities believe that recent confusions in U.S. foreign policy can be resolved until the Shultz-Weinberger war is ended. But in spite of the efforts by Mr. McFarlane and others in the administration, the prospects for such a resolu-

"Everyone over here wants them to work together instead of arguing," says a White House aide, "but we know it won't be easy."

Too Many Secrets Lead to Leaks, U.S. Officials Find

ASHINGTON - The following paragraph, taken from a memorandum

V setting out objectives for the U.S. Navy's 1986 budget, was classified "Secret." In its entirety, it reads: "The navy must continue to attract and retain sufficient numbers of high quality, skilled and motivated people. Compensation and quality of life improvements must be competitive in the job market. Ways must be found to reduce requirements for administrative functions, reduce personnel turbulence and permanent change of station moves."

change of station moves."

In context, the paragraph was one of four under the heading of "General Programming Objectives." One instructed planners to ensure that the navy was ready to fight "today, across Another said that deployments around the world would continue. A third, also in its entirety, ordered, "Take maximum advantage of our technological superiority." The four paragraphs were in a document given to a reporter by someone who hoped to influence policy. All vere marked "Secret."

Why those paragraphs were classified secret is not exactly clear, for the secret classification, according to Executive Order 12356, "shall be applied to information, the unauthorized disclosure of which reasonably could be expected to cause serious damage to the national security."

Could the disclosure of an effort by the navy to enlist and keep good sailors be rea expected to cause "serious damage" to the na-tional security of the United States? Or is this a classic case of the extent to which some government officials abuse, misuse and overuse the authority to keep information secret, thereby rendering the system almost meaningless at times? Whatever the answers, the Reagan administration, which has vigorously sought to reduce the flow of government information into the public domain, seems lately to have concluded that the classification system itself is part of the problem because so many people, in and out of overnment, have lost respect for it. The new attorney general, Edwin Meese 3d. said recently: "We have far too much classified information in the federal government. A lot of

But actually, there is a computer in each of the products shown in these pictures.

The car, for example. It's equipped with our recently introduced ABS anti-lock braking system. Which is controlled by an ITT computer

Our System 12[®] telephone exchange and our 5200 Business Communications System are basically computers.

Even the light pen that "writes" instructions on a video screen couldn't function without a computer

The point is, ITT computer technology exists in much that we do these days.

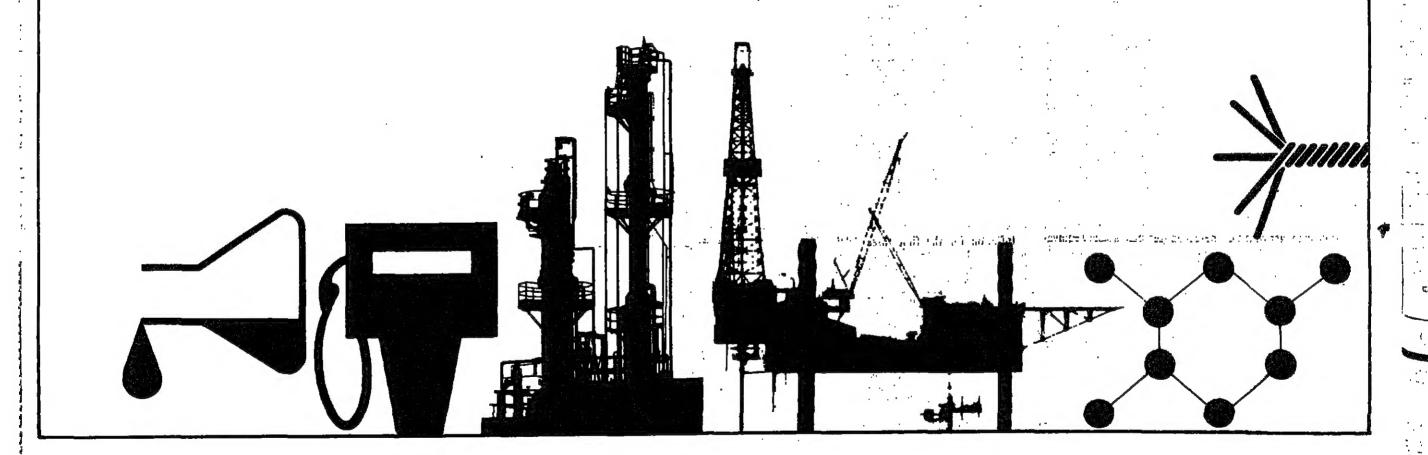

We've identified a select number of growing businesses that we're concentrating on. And many of them involve high technology.

You may not be able to see all the changes we've made in ITT yet. But the results will be easy to spot.

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

China Lures Foreign Firms But Slow Growth Is Seen

By SHERRY BUCHANAN international Herald Tribu

ARIS - China may not yet be the land of golden opportunities, but it is trying. Following a series of overtures to Western businesses last year, the market in China for managerial talent has grown. Nevertheless, it seems that such growth will be slow at first.

As more ventures between China and foreign companies have been formed, demand by U.S. and European concerns for qualified managerial staff to work in China has also risen. Beijing official figures show that since 1979, China has approved 930 joint business ventures with foreign concerns. This figure includes all bilateral contracts and licensing agreements. And the pace increased last year, with 741 projects set up. The Chinese government approved 83 joint-equity ven-tures between 1979 and 1982 and an additional 105 such arrangements in 1983. In a joint-equity venture, both the Chinese and foreign concern invest in the project.

Foreign companies complain of indirect taxation in China.

There are no figures available for the total number of expatri-ates working in China. But many companies operating in China try to keep their managerial staffs lean. This is partly due to Beijing's policy and partly because of the costs involved.
The Chinese government wants Western managerial expertise but is also anxious to provide jobs for aspiring Chinese managers. On the other hand, Western companies want to retain some managerial control over their projects but also aim to keep their costs down. Housing and office space for expatriate staff is expensive. Framatome SA, the French-nuclear power company negotiating to build a plant in China, estimates that keeping a team there costs the company $800,000 a month.

THER factors are also keeping foreign investment in China from rising rapidly. Many Western companies still view the Chinese market as uncertain. "In the heady days of 1978 and 1979 (when the Chinese first opened the country to foreign investment) companies took on a lot of staff to work specifically in China," explains Susan Ware, editor of the London-based Sino-British Trade Review. "Then there was a shakeout in 1980 to 1981."

Learning from their mistakes, foreign companies prefer to keep staffing in China flexible. They work on the theory that they can always increase expatriate employees if business grows beyond expectations.

"We have to be pretty flexible with our staff size," says Dick Hughes, vice president of marketing for Fluor China Inc. "In other countries where we had joint ventures, we always had an idea of the work down the road." Fluor China, a subsidiary of Fluor Engineers Inc., the U.S. engineering company, plans to only have three expatriate managers for the joint-venture it expects to set up in China. The agreement is expected to be signed with the Chinese government on May 1.

"Compared to our investment there, our managerial staff is small," says a spokesman for Gould Inc., the U.S. electronics company, of China. The company has only one expatriate manager in China. Last year, Gould signed a 10-year licensing agreement with the state-owned National Machinery & Equipment Import & Export Corp. in Tanjin to assemble computerized

Under some licensing and joint-venture agreements, the Chiness government has required the joint venture to match each expatriate manager with a Chinese manager, paid a salary equivalent to the expatriate manager's salary. The Chinese manager is then paid the lower, official Chinese wage and the government (Continued on Page 13, Col. 1)

Inflation In U.S. Up 0.5%

Durables Orders Down by 2.3%

WASHINGTON - Surging gasoline prices drove consumer costs up 0.5 percent in March, the government reported Tuesday, But analysts said the big increase was a one-month phenomenon and no cause for fears that inflation is re-heating.

More worrisome to economists was yet another drop in orders for durable goods, a further indication that manufacturing industries are suffering from foreign competition.

Overall, factory orders for dura-ble manufactured goods dropped 2.3 percent in March, the third decline in the last four months, despite a 24-percent increase in defense equipment orders, according to Commerce Department figures released Tuesday.

The weakness in U.S. manufacturing has been cited as one of the main reasons that overall economic growth was so weak during the first three months of the year, as reported last week.

In another report, the Labor De-partment reported Tuesday that real average weekly earnings in-creased 0.3 percent from February to March, adjusted seasonally, and the Treasury said the budget deficit jumped by $28.5 billion in March.

The earnings increase stemmed from a 0.5-percent rise in average hourly earnings and a 0.3-percent increase in average weekly hours. The March deficit figure brings the total for the fiscal year that began last Oct. 1 to $128.1 billion.

The White House spokesman, Larry Speakes, said, "Inflation still appears to be well under control." But he added that "prompt, decisive action by Congress in reducing federal spending is essential if we are to maintain the expansion of the U.S. economy."

Index was the most pronounced since January, 1984, analysts noted it was due primarily to a 3.8-per-cent jump in gasoline and other motor fuels coming on the heels of a 2.6-percent decline in February. Inflation for the first three months of the year — after in-creases of 0.2 percent in January and 0.3 percent in February - is running at an annual rate of 4.1. percent. It was 4 percent in all of first refusal. 1984 and many economists do not . think it will be any higher by the end of 1985.

"There's really nothing to be concerned with," Rob Wescott of Wharton Econometrics said of the consumer price report. "I see this as temporary, a one-month aberra-

Dollar Up Sharply in the U.S.

NEW YORK — The dollar rallied sharply in the United States and Europe Tuesday, surging on a wave of speculation-led buying despite new signs that the U.S. econo-moves were sparked by news of a large and unexpected drop in U.S. March durable-goods orders. "We had expected it to fall very heavily on that figure, but it re-rused to go below 3.01 Deutsche marks," one dealer said. "This sparked stop-loss buying orders which quickly snowballed." But dealers cautioned that the frenzied buying that sent the dollar to about 3.0880 DM in early afternoon trading in New York did not represent a change in its fundamen-

The 'Battle Royal' Over Zellerbach

Goldsmith Sets Sights on U.S. Forest-Products Firm

By Victor F. Zonana By VICTOR F. ZORIANZ

Los Angeles Times Service

SAN FRANCISCO — An executive of Crown Zellerbach, the forest-products giant that is the latest target of the Anglo-French industrialist. Sir James Goldsmith, is still haunted by a sight to New York.

to New York.
"I was walking down the street and I saw the old headquarters of Dismond International Corp., the forest-products and packaging concern that Sir James acquired in 1982 and later dismembered. "It looked like a very lonely place."

For this executive, the sight of Diamond International's deserted offices drove home what he feels is a simple truth: that Crown Zellerbach, a 115-year-old fixture of the West Coast business community, is engaged in a fight for its corporate life. Occupants of the company's landmark headquarters building here are hunkering down for a long siege.

Early this month, Sir James, who holds an 8.6-percent stake in the company, threatened in a letter to Zellerbach to begin a proxy light if its directors do not dismantle an elaborate anti-takoover defense that they installed

The threat was coupled with an offer by General Oriental Investment Ltd., Sir James' primary holding company, to acquire Zellerbach, which owns or controls about 2 million acres

William T. Creson

(800,000 hectares) of prime U.S. timberland, for at least $1.13 billion, or $41.625 a share. Sir James has not yet disclosed any plans for Zeilerbach, but company officials fear Zellerbach's fate would be similar to Diamond's.

In a sharply worded statement, the company defiantly vowed that it would not be "hurried, bullied or intimidated," Earlier, William T. Creson, Zellerbach's chairman and chief executive officer, insisted that the company would not buy back Sir James' shares at a premium, a practice known in the business of mergers and acquisitions as pay-

A group headed by Sir James last year gained a $50-million premium when it sold its 9-percent stake in St. Regis Corp. back to the company; St. Regis was later acquired by Champion International. Other forest-products companies also have been taken over by investors seeking undervalued assets.

In its attempt to avoid a similar fate, Zellerbach has hired some of the biggest names in the mergers-and-acquisitions field including Martin Lipton, a laywer, Salomon Brothers Inc., a New York-based investment banking firm, and Gershon Kekst, a public relations man — to orchestrate its defense.

The showdown between Sir James and Zellerbach is shaping up as a "battle royal," said George B. Adler, first vice president and a forest-products analyst for Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. Mr. Adler thinks that Sir James' bid has put Zellerbach up for grabs and that the company will eventually be sold for more than $50 a share.

"There are already buyers lined up for various parts of Crown Zellerbach," he said.

Sir James, a flamboyant financier whose career began at the age of 20 when he paid $200 for the rights to peddle a British rheumatism cream in his native France, can be a tenacious opponent. It took him more than two years to wear down Diamond International. His global finan-cial empire includes the French weekly news magazine, L'Express, oil reserves in Guatemala and a 40-percent interest in the (Continued on Page 13, Col. 1)

Renault Raises '84 Loss Estimate To $1.38 Billion

By Axel Krause

Tuesday that its estimated loss for 1984 had widened to about 12.5 billion francs ($1.38 billion), 3.5 billion francs more than forecast by the government and the largest ever by a French company.

The higher figure, presented to the board by the chairman. Georges Besse, was nearly a tenfold increase over the 1983 loss and largely reflected special provisions to cover planned layoffs and imme-diate financing requirements. These total about 4.5 billion francs and were decided upon by Mr. Besse shortly after being named chairman on Jan. 22.

In January, government and industry sources estimated the 1984 loss at 9 billion francs.

Mr. Besse succeeded Bernard Hanon, who was fired by the government primarily because of Renault's mounting losses. The company had a loss of 1.57 billion francs in 1983 and a loss of 1.28 billion francs in 1982.

Mr. Besse also said that Re-nault's consolidated sales rose to an estimated 117.6 billion francs in 1984 from 110.2 billion francs in 1983. Final figures on sales and earnings will be announced at the annual board meeting on May 21.

The Renault chief did not disclose reorganization plans. These are currently being discussed with top managers and may be an-nounced within several weeks, according to industry, banking and government sources.

According to the sources, the company's goal is to substantially reduce Renault's losses and various steps are being considered, such as closing inefficient plants and installing advanced technology.

Under a decision approved by company's work force will be re-duced to 89,000 by the end of this year from 103,000 at the end of late that Mr. Besse may be forced

al Herald Tribun STOCKHOLM - Kabi Vitrum AB, one of the world's largest makers of human-growth hormone for treating dwarfism, said Tuesday that it was halting production of the substance because a death has been traced to a similar hormone made by a U.S. producer. The halt came on the eve of a nossible announcement of a cooperation agreement, or possibly a merger, between the state-owned company and Fermenta AB, a fastgrowing maker of products for the abiotics industry.

Lars Eric Boettiger, Kabi's vice president for medical affairs, said the company was suspending sales of crescomone, produced from pimitary glands taken from cadavers, after it was determined that a young man in the United States died of a rare nerve disease. Bid by Pickens

The announcement made changes in an earlier defensive measure, in which the 13th-largest U.S. oil company had said it would buy back 87.2 mil-lion shares of its stock, or 49.9 percent of its shares, only if Mr. Pickens succeeded in his attempt to purchase the other 50.1 percent.

The California oil concern is offering securities valued at $72 a share for its stock. Mr. Pickens is offering $54 a share in cash in his current bid for 64 million additional shares.

Mr. Pickens's group, Mesa Partners II, criticized the initial Unocal offer as too conditional and claimed it was designed to confuse shareholders prior to Unocal's annual meeting next Worldwide sales of vehicles to GM dealers increased 2.8 percent to 2.38 million cars and trucks, compared with 2.31 million a year ago. Domestic sales of cars and Strucks increased 5 percent to 1.67 million from 1.59 million units in the year-ago period.

The two top officials said that domestic sales are still on target at 15 million units for 1985, and predicted another outstanding year for ately needed mill modernization. Mr. Creson also pruned Zeller-

bach's product line to eliminate such low-margin commodities as newsprint, pulp and kraft paper, which is used to make brown paper

Nevertheless, the company's earnings have remained lackluster. Zellerbach posted net income of $86.9 million, or $2.61 a share, in 1984, down slightly from a year earlier, as improved earnings from paper, container, specialty packagand distribution operations were offset by depressed conditions in the timber and wood industry. Analysts say Mr. Creson inherit-is company that had been severely weakened by years of mismanmills in the industry, critics say. One of Mr. Creson's first acts was to get the board to slash the dividend on common stock in order to divert cash toward capital spending. The dividend was cut 57 percent to a $1-a-share annual rate from the previous $2.30. Though it served its purpose, the move made Zellerbach shareholders restive and added to the company's vulnerability to a hostile takeover.

Despite this encouraging performance, the bank's net result turned into a loss of 369,800,000 francs due to provisions of 459,100,000 francs,

This stemmed from the increased vulnerability of a number of property developers, which was already noticeable last year, and that of a number of real estate operations initiated by group companies several

During this meeting, it was also announced that the bank's balance sheet had been strengthened by a participating and convertible shareholder's loan issue of 120,000,000 francs, under the terms of an agreement

Healthy profitability maintained in 1984

Fee-earning business expanded Balance sheet structure further improved

Commerzbank again achieved outstanding results in 1984. Its continued good performance strongly reflects significant further improvements in its balance sheet structure. Above all, the Bank considerably stepped up its customer business both at home and abroad, in particular scoring success through the reinforcement of its domestic retail position.

Consolidated total assets rose from DM 113.2 billion to DM 122.7 billion, All sectors operated profitably, the Group nearly attaining the record earnings level posted in 1983. This enabled Commerzbank to repeat the 12% dividend to its 140,000 shareholders, while again making substantial loan loss provisions and markedly strengthening its reserves. The Group's equity base was thus raised from DM 2.92 billion to DM 3.14 billion.

Fee-generating activities are assuming an ever more important part in the Bank's earnings performance, both nationally and internationally. Foreign commercial business, especially export-related transactions, turned in sound gains. Commerzbank also broadened its engagement in investment banking, lead-managing 26 foreign DM bond issues and co-managing 53 others. Trust business, including portfolio management and broker/dealer services, registered sturdy growth. Own-account activities once more contributed notably to the year's results, as did the operations of the Bank's foreign branches and subsidiaries.

Backed by solid financial and human resources, Commerzbank is active around the clock, around the world. Its international presence, which now includes some 70 outlets in over 30 countries, is to be extended this year through a wholly-owned subsidiary in Zurich and a fourth US office in Los Angeles.

0-50 km/h very slowly.

0-50 km/h very quickly.

We hope you'll never see a long queue at an Avis rental desk. Not that we don't like being popular. We do.

Which is why we've introduced ways of getting you into your car faster than anyone else.

Our Avis Express Card for instance. All those tedious questions you're usually asked are encoded on a magnetic strip.

When we run it through one of our computer terminals your rental agreement is printed automatically.

But it's not just our speed that's made us the largest rental company throughout Europe, Africa and the Middle East. (Around the world we're represented in 126 countries and more than 1100 airports.)

We may have the only direct worldwide computer link in car

But we also owe a lot to those three old-fashioned words.

We try harder.

Pan Am-United Pact on Pacific Routes EC Jobless Total Jolts Airline Industry, Raises Questions

By Richard Witkin

NEW YORK - The airline industry has been jolted by the agreement that could transfer the historic Pacific operations of Pan American World Airways to United Airlines.

If there was one point on which experts agreed after Monday's announcement, it was that a minimum of 12 to 18 months will be needed before the change can take effect.

The outcome depends on decisions of the federal government. And those decisions are bound to be critically affected by the positions of Japan and other Pacific Ocean governments and of U.S. airlines directly or potentially involved in trans-Pacific competition.

volved in trans-Pacific competition.

Beyond the issue of government approvals, the biggest question posed by industry observers was what the effect would be on the long-term future of Pan Am. Underlying that uncertainty was a nostalgic sadness at the truncation of a global enterprise that had been synonymous with 11S aeronautical prestige and influence. mous with U.S. aeronautical prestige and influ-lt was Pan Am, under the sometimes erratic but visionary leadership of Juan Trippe, that pioneered trans-ocean airline operations. In fact, Mr. Trippe began his long-range, over-water jumps across the Pacific, not the Atlantic. The results of that move, made in the mid-1930s with giant flying boats, was the securing of facilities at such places as Guam and Wake Island that were to prove of tremendous value in World War II.

Consummation of the agreement with United would mean that no single U.S. airline would carry the U.S. flag to all major areas around the world. Some industry specialists even raised the question of whether the routes were Pan Am's question of whether the routes were Pan Am's to sell or whether they belonged to the American people.

As some members of the aviation industry see it, the United States has lost sight of the intangible benefits, in prestige and influence, that have accrued from the omnipresence of the Pan Am logotype at the world's major capitals. Others, however, say that "showing the flag" on planes of a giant airline identified with a government has lost its value.

has lost its value. From a narrower point of view, the key question being asked is what impelled Pan Am to agree to leave the Pacific. The Far East is almost universally looked upon as the world's most dynamic growth area, with the greatest poten-tial for generating new waves of international Pan American's chairman, C. Edward Acker, said at a news conference that his company could not afford the huge investment needed to buy jumbo jets that could compete with other carriers and to develop major California hubs to feed its trans-Pacific operations.

Declined in March

BRUSSELS — Unemployment in the European Community fell in March to 11.8 percent of the labor force from 12 percent in February, the community's statistics office, Eurostat, reported Tuesday. The number of people registered as unemployed fell 317,000 to 13.3 million last month, the lowest total since last December.

The total is not seasonally adjusted and exclude Control with the control of the control o cludes Greece, where jobless criteria are not comparable with those of the other EC member nations.

The March report said the biggest declines in unemployment were in West Germany, with a drop of 137,000; France, with a decline of 65,000, and Britain, down 56,000. Italy, with an increase of 3,000 jobless, was the only country to show an increase.

lreland continued to have the highest unemployment rate, at 17.8 percent, down from 18.1 percent in February. Luxembourg again had the lowest rate — 1.7 percent compared with 1.8 percent in February.

A DICTIONARY OF SLANG AND UNCONVENTIONAL ENGLISH Eighth Edition

By Eric Partridge. Edited by Paul Beale. 1,400 pp. $75.

Macmillan, 866 Third Avenue, New York,

N. Y. 10022. Reviewed by John Gross

WHEN it first appeared in 1937, Eric Par-tridge's "Dictionary of Slang and Uncon-ventional English" quickly established itself as the nearest thing to a standard work in its field. It was a heroic achievement, and Partridge went on adding to it over the years. By the time the seventh edition came out in 1969, his additions had spilled over into a supplementary volume, and he was still collecting material a few weeks before his death 10 years later.

Not long before he died he designated a successor — Paul Beale, a former British intelligence officer who became involved with the dictionary in 1974 when he began submitting military slang. Beat has produced a single-volume edition that is a landmark in the history of the work. Along with some corrections and judicious pruning, he has done his best to bring it up to date; more important, for the first time revisions and additions have been integrated into the original text.

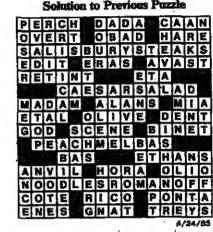

The new entries reflect a good deal of the social history of recent years. Moonies, Sloane

Rangers and punk rockers have come over the horizon, to say nothing of wimps and Wets (soft-line Tory opponents of Margaret Thatcher; the focus of the dictionary remains predominants and the source of the dictionary remains predominants and the source of t inantly British.)

Since the first edition, and still more since the seventh edition, most lexicographical taboos have broken down. By Partridge's estimate, what he called "vulgarisms" occupied only about 0.5 percent of the original work, though they were what people tended to look up first. "Vulgar" topics are another matter; the dictionary conveys as few books do the preoccupations and attitudes that loomed much larger in everyday life than they do in formal literature or official pronouncements. But if it brings you close to the commonplace, and to the lowest common denominator, it also reminds you of how many subdivisions and subcultures a society is liable to have.

As a reference book, the dictionary is indis-pensable. Edmund Wilson once said, "It ought to be acquired by every reader who wants his library to have a sound lexicographical foundation." But since Partridge's death, critics have begun to point out some of the dictionary's weaknesses, most of which stem from its having been essentially a one-man operator.

It contains many mistakes and has many gaps. it contains many mistakes and has many gaps; its system of dating is haphazard, and far too reliant on printed references; its choice of material is heavily influenced by Partridge's Australasian origins and his experiences as a soldier in World War I.

Although Beale gives signs of being aware of these shortcomings, he belongs to the same tradition. The gaps remain, and he has, so to speak, added some gaps of his own; readers will look in vain for many familiar terms.

But this remains an endlessly rewarding book Open it anywhere and you are likely to

And the one about the spectator shouting abuse. "Who." Rous demanded, "is refereeing — you or 1?" The reply: "Neither of us."

Somewhow he retained a streak of the gullibility he displayed as a 14-year-old goalie. When the referne's whistle was first pressed into his hand, he recalls asking the Nor-wich team captain (who had put it there) when he should blow it. "When I tell you," came the reply. 19 consecutive batters. He gave up a double to Jim Dwyer in the first inning and an infield single to Cal Ripken in the third (when he also walked his only batter of the game).

Texas took a 3-1 lead in the first off Scott McGregor (1-1), who suf-fered his first loss in seven lifetime decisions to the Rangers. Ward's run-scoring triple, a sacrifice fly by Buddy Bell and Parrish's homer put the Rangers ahead to stay. In the second, they made it 5-1 and chased McGregor on Toby Har-rah's RBI double and a run-scoring single by Ward. O'Brien's second home run of the year, off Sammy Stewart in the eighth, produced the final margin.

Baltimore, which has lost six of its last eight games, scored in the first when Dwyer doubled, went to third on a passed ball by catcher Don Slaught and scored on a wild pitch by Hough.

"Hough was changing speeds very well," said Dwyer. "Their catcher can hardly catch that knuckleball, so how am I supposed to hit it? If we looked like we couldn't hit it, your eyes weren't deceiving you."

Nazis: A Show-Biz View

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — In the enter-N tainment business, villains go through three stages. They begin as representations of authentic evil. Their task is to be loathed and feared, then destroyed to make audiences happy. Because audiences, being human, cannot be unreservedly happy to see another human.

Death and amuses himself by casually killing helpless people. We are delighted when Shane fills him with Pure villainy, however, can satisfy an audience only in small doses. So a mutation occurs. It is designed with the real world to make the villain interesting to about issuing them. the audience by exhibiting certain characteristics that say that, for all his nastiness, he is still a human being. In its higher form this creature is one of Shakespeare's inventions, such as the king in "Hamlet," who may be a murderer but he still tries to pray; or Lady Macbeth, too humanly prone to guilt to make a

While the audience approves the destruction of such people, it doesn't cheer about it. In movies a villain in this phase may even be so sentimentalized that the audience dislikes seeing him punished.

Decadence sets in at Stage Three. Here the villain is burlesqued and the evil he once represenied is made a subject of ridicule. The Jack Palance character, for example, may be played by a performer famous for his amusing drunk act - Dean Martin, perhaps and, of course, he bungles all his killings by getting drunk and fall-ing off his horse.

Now something interesting has happened. We have lost all contact with the moral questions that were raised when the villain was pure evil. And we have moved away from difficult questions of human weakness that troubled us with Cagney and Lady Macbeth. Now we have turned grave issues raised by villainy into idle show business.

The villain has arrived at a stage in which the juices of real life have been squeezed out of him. Now he

from any connection with reality as the audience knows it.

The three stages of villainy make me think of the Nazis, who have passed through the same stages during the nearly 50 years during which they have served American entertainment

In the late 1930s and during the war years, the entertainment world s Nazi was a representation of the real thing — a system that created monsters costumed head to toe in black who amused that

The earliest movies of this genre were so directly involved with the reality of Nazi Germany that the studios, always timid about dealing with the real world, were nervous

Very late in the war came the first movie hints that not every Nazi was pure beast, that there might be one or two with a bit of humanity. We were in Stage Two here, the phase later to be spoofed by the burlesque Nazi saying. "Zo, you are surprised dot a Nazi can like Beethoven?"

With Stage Three, the show-biz Nazi became an incompetently hilarious bungler, as illustrated in the popular long-running television sit-com "Hogan's Heroes." Here was the Nazi as side-splitting top banana, the amoral equivalent of the gunslinger as lovable boozer and Dracula as the hysterical gay.

Now the Nazi began to exist only as an institutionalized show-business convention disconnected from any reality the audience had ever experienced. For one thing, more and more of the audience hadn't been born until the real non-entertainment Nazis had been put behind us; for another, more and more people who knew that the tertainment Nazis had been neither hilariously incompetent nor amusing had been so marinated in show-biz Nazism that Entertainment Naziland had begun to seem like the real thing.

This seems to have happened to President Reagan. Perhaps it was natural for a man of the entertainment world. Perhaps he did us a service, for we need to be reminded that evil can sometimes be absolutely authentic.

Only Recently Have Recording Artists Discovered Their Power to Raise

Large Sums for Charity

By Robert Palmer

New York Times Service

New YORK — Concerts intended to raise money for humanitarian projects or for issue-oriented groups such as the anti-nuclear movement have been around for years. So has the "telethon" concept of radio and television programming, which has raised funds to combat a number of diseases. But only recently have recording artists begun to discover their power to raise large sums of money for charity by assembling a galaxy of stars to make hit records, with the artists donating time and services and the record company turning over the profits. Scores of recording stars in the rock, Latin, reggae, gospel, heavy-metal rock and African pop idioms are banding together to make singles and albums, with the profits earmarked to aid the starving and homeless in Ethiopia and elsewhere.

The trend was inspired by a gathering of British pop stars, re-cording as Band Aid, whose single "Do They Know It's Christmas?" was a hit in Britain during the Christmas holidays and raised more than £8 million (now about $10 million) for African famine victims. But the major impetus has been the No. 1 single and Top 5 album "We Are the World," recorded by more than 40 American stars calling themselves USA for Africa.

Four million albums, 3 million singles, 400,000 posters and 140,000 copies of a "We Are the World" book have been sold in the last month. Sales of the album - which includes previously unreleased songs by Prince, Bruce Springsteen, Tina Turner and others whose disks regularly sell in the millions — have generated $20 million in aid. It all began last fall with Bob Geldof, lead singer for the Irish group Boomtown Rats. He cowrote "Do They Know It's Christmas?" and assembled the British stars (as well as members of the American group Kool and the Gang).

From a strictly musical standpoint, these recordings have been a mixed blessing. "Do They Know It's Christmas?" has a sentimental lyric and treacly ar-

The USA for Africa single, "We Are the World," is a more solid piece of music. It starts somewhat blandly, but gathers momentum and emotional punch about half-way through, especially when Ray Charles begins kicking the rhythm along.
"When Ray comes in, it's like hearing the soul of America," said Lionel Richie, who wrote the song with Michael Jackson. "But our idea was to make the song an anthem that anybody could sing." From this point of view, the song is remarkably successful. The album "We Are the World" is a hodgepodge; too many of the songs sound like rejects from the stars' most recent album sessions, though several were newly written and specially recorded. The nadir is "Tears Are Not Enough," sung by Joni Mitchell, Neil Young and other Canadian artists.

Julio Iglesias, Celia Cruz, José Feliciano and a number of other Latin stars, calling themselves Hermanos (Brothers), recorded April 9; a single of a specially composed song, "Cantare, Can-taras," will be released May 15 by Hermanos Records. An album being put together for a mid-June release is expected to include Menudo, Placido Domingo, Irene Cara and other leading Latin mu-

Although the original intention was to donate most of the money to Africa, now Hermanos plans to contribute 90 percent to aid the hungry and homeless in Latin America.

Sixty-five gospel artists, in-cluding Al Green, Amy Grant and Shirley Caesar, joined the drive for African famine relief April 3 after ceremonies for the Gospel Music Association's Dove Awards in Nashville. As most popular heavy-metal bands, including Quiet Riot, Judas Priest, the Scorpions and Iron Maiden, as well as the heavy-metal satirists Spinal Tap, have agreed to contribute performances. The group is planning to call itself Hear 'n' Aid.

Several benefit concerts are being planned. The wives of 39 African delegates to the United Nations have organized United African Mothers for the Crisis and will present Roberta Flack, Melba Moore, Manhattan Transfer, the National Dance Company of Africa and other artists in a $250-a-ticket benefit concert Friday in the General Assembly Hall for the Secretary General's Emergency Fund for Africa. Peter Martins choreographed "We Are the World" for a New York City Ballet production.

Martin Rogol, executive director of the USA for Africa Foundation, said the organization and artists involved hoped to contribute to long-term solutions for some African problems.

"We studied the roots of the situation," he said. "We found that the famine is part of a larger crisis that's a legacy of European colonialism, political instability and corruption, and ambitious industrialization programs that have left farm and grazing land to be swallowed up by the advancing desert."

Rogol said 35 percent of the funds would go for immediate relief, with emphasis on medicine and food. The second 35 percent," he said, "will go for agricultural aid, to help the African nations hit hardest by the famine become self-sufficient in terms of growing their own food. Another 20 percent will go for long-term economic development in those countries, and the final 10 percent is for aid to the hungry and homeless in our own country." M Shipping Effort Begun

The stars who sang as Band Aid have sponsored a shipping service to take relief supplies to famine victims in Ethiopia and Sudan, Reuters reported Monday from London.

The service will carry relief supplies bought with proceeds from the record as well as supplies from international relief agencies, a spokesman for the group said.
